&lt;p&gt;There was a split at the club in 1906, after some of the staff considered moving Juve out of Turin.[29] &#127823; Alfred Dick, the club&#39;s president, [g] was unhappy with this, and left with some prominent players to found FBC Torino, which &#127823; in turn spawned the Derby della Mole.[32] Juventus spent much of this period steadily rebuilding after the split, surviving the &#127823; ; First World War.[31]&lt;/p&gt;
&lt;p&gt;Juventus moved to the Stadio Comunale, but for the rest of the 1930s and the majority of the &#127823; 1940s they were unable to recapture championship dominance. After the Second World War, Gianni Agnelli was appointed president. [29] In the &#127823; late 1940s and early 1950s, the club added two more league championships to its name, winning the 1949 50 Serie A &#127823; under the management of Englishman Jesse Carver, and then repeating in the 1951 52 Serie A. For the 1957 58 Serie A, &#127823; two new strikers, Welshman John Charles and Italian Argentine Omar S&#237;vori, were signed to play alongside longtime member Giampiero Boniperti. &#127823; In the 1959 60 Juventus F.C. season, they beat Fiorentina to complete their first league and cup double, winning the 1959 60 &#127823; Serie A and the 1960 Coppa Italia final. Boniperti retired in 1961 as the all-time top scorer at the club, &#127823; with 182 goals in all competitions, a club record that stood for 45 years.[37]&lt;/p&gt;
